Silicon Valley is the technology powerhouse of the world. The inventions flowing out of this once small, sleepy region—in 1940 it was the prune capital of the world—have transformed the way people around the globe live, work, and play.

The Computer History Museum is located in the heart of Silicon Valley and contains some of the hallmark artifacts of Silicon Valley’s history. See where global computer giants like HP, Intel, Apple, and Google had their humble beginnings and learn how technology has transformed the world.
